1900-1901

The first thing I noticed when I stepped out of the train was the cold. It was a sharp contrast to the warm, humid air of the South. The snow was falling in soft, white flakes, and the ground was covered in a thin layer of white. The trees were bare, their branches reaching out like skeletal fingers against the grey sky. The air smelled of pine and frost.

I had heard that the winter in the North was harsh, but I didn't realize just how cold it would be. The wind was biting, and the sun was a pale, distant orb in the sky. I wrapped my coat around me, feeling the rough texture of the fabric. The snow was falling faster now, and I could hear it pattering on the rooftops and the ground. The world seemed to have been wrapped in a thick, white blanket.

I had come here for a new start, for a fresh beginning. I had left behind the old life, the old friends, and the old dreams. I had come here with nothing but a few pieces of luggage and a heart full of hope. I had heard that the North was a land of opportunity, a place where hard work could lead to a better life. I had come here to see if that was true.

I had heard that the North was a land of freedom, a place where I could be who I wanted to be. I had come here to see if that was true. I had heard that the North was a land of beauty, a place where the scenery was breathtaking. I had come here to see if that was true. I had heard that the North was a land of peace, a place where I could find the quiet I needed. I had come here to see if that was true.
